"Enter a Different World," it says in the entrance of Harrods in Knightsbridge, London, and visitors do just that. Harrods is not the oldest, but it's probably the most famous department store in the world.

B ■■■

In the beginning, Harrods was just a small grocer's. Charles Henry Harrod opened it in 1849. His son took over and added fruit, flowers, sweets and a delivery service. It became an official supplier to the Royal Family. It is now more than just a shop. It is a London landmark, a must-see UK tourist attraction.

C ■■■

35,000 people visit Harrods every day. In addition to its 300 departments, selling everything from clothes to caviar, there are twenty-six restaurants and cafés, a bank, a travel agent's and the biggest hair and beauty salon in Europe. It employs over 4,000 staff, including the famous doormen (known as

D ■■■

'Green Men'), security guards dressed as ordinary shoppers, doctors and nurses – even its own fire brigade!

E ■■■

"All things, for all people, everywhere" is the store's motto, because there's nothing you can't find there. There even used to be a pet department where you could buy lions and alligators! But today most people come to look around and buy something small so they can get one of the famous green bags. So if you're in London, don't miss the opportunity to visit this historic department store!
